Preface

Covid-19 a global burden has impacted every person on earth. Over the past year, we have experienced various phases of this pandemic. To some, it has brought great pain in losing a loved one, loss of a job, caring for children, working at home, readjusting schedules, closing of businesses, and other life-altering events. In determining the degree of changes in lifestyle-related behaviors, the interplay of the magnitude of COVID-19 infection with different social, economic environmental and cultural constructs could vary from country to country. To say Covid-19 has been a stressor is putting it mildly. This has caught attention of scientists, academicians, social scientists, policy makers and the like necessitating discussions at various international and national fora. This battle against COVID-19 pandemic cannot be won without involvement of each and every citizen. We as a responsible citizen of our country should participate in this battle against the zoonotic disease. The availability of vaccinations provides us with a light at the end of the tunnel. This light tells us we might begin to reclaim some of what we lost shortly.

This book is planned to assess the effect of COVID-19 on lifestyle, education, social, economical and environmental changes. The book contains 12 articles of eminent researchers of various fields.

This book is dedicated to all ones who have lost due to this pandemic.
